MEMORANDUM

TO : Bureau Host Officers

SUBJECT: Scholar-Diplomat Seminars

The purpose of these seminars is to initiate dialogue with academicians who have professional expertise in international affairs, and to provide them with an opportunity to view our work. We also want to hear what they have to say about our foreign policies and processes so it is important for the Department officers to elicit the views of our guests as well as imparting theirs.

The key to the success of these seminars is the alert and helpful action of each Host Officer in introducing the visiting scholar to our work in the Department and in responding to his particular interests by arranging meetings with other officers in the host Bureau or elsewhere in the Department.

To permit the maximum openness, frankness, and candor, the scholars have received security clearances for "access through SECRET". This will permit them to see incoming and outgoing messages, to read policy papers, and to discuss sensitive issues. They will be briefed on our security rules during their first morning in the Department.

Several meetings of the whole group will be arranged in advance. These include meetings with the Assistant Secretary of the host Bureau and with officers in PA, INR and other Bureaus. The Public Affairs Advisor's office in the host Bureau and PA/PP will be in charge of arrangements and will keep you informed of the schedule. For a portion of the time, however, our guests will be with their individual Host Officers or pursuing appointments made by the Host Officer.

We are asking you first and foremost to provide the scholar with a full opportunity to view your work at the desk level. Secondly, in keeping with your guest's professional expertise, we ask you to make appointments for him or her to meet with other officers to discuss problems and processes. A few appointments might be made in advance where it is obvious that they fit the scholar's background, but most such appointments should be made after you get acquainted with the scholar. Experience has shown that spontaneous response to the scholar's expressions of interest is the best course to follow.

It is suggested that about a week before the seminar you call the scholar assigned to you and discuss the program. You should emphasize that we are keeping the schedule as loosely structured as possible, so that the scholar may pursue his or her own interests to the maximum extent. Solicit the scholar's initial ideas on what he/she would like to do and base your initial appointments for the scholar on those ideas.

Some of the scholars may wish to lead a discussion of research he or she has in progress in order to seek comment, criticism and suggestions from Department officers. In such instances, please notify the Seminar Coordinator so that a special meeting can be set up. While this is entirely optional for the scholars, we should welcome such initiative.

In those instances where the scholars are specifically interested in a particular country, it is hoped that you can arrange at some point during the week for the scholar to meet officers of that country's Embassy in Washington.

If at any time during the week you find your Host Officer's responsibilities too time-consuming or in conflict with your other duties, please notify the Public Affairs Advisor's office in your Bureau or call the Seminar Coordinator immediately so that assistance can be arranged.

I appreciate your willingness to serve as a Host Officer for this seminar and welcome any suggestions you may wish to pass along to me regarding this program.

PURPOSE AND OBJECTIVES

The State Department has been conducting its Scholar-Diplomat Seminars for the past 10 years; over 1,600 scholars have participated. The program is designed to provide an opportunity for a professional exchange of views and expertise between scholars and Department officials working in similar fields.

The heart of the weeklong program is the scholar-host officer relationship. The Department assigns a host officer to each participating scholar. This officer is usually at the desk-officer level and is working in an area of interest to the scholar. Scholars are given a security clearance and are therefore able to discuss fully their host's work. Each day scholars sit with their hosts, read incoming and outgoing messages, attend staff meetings, use files, and make suggestions and comments. The host officer is prepared to arrange for the scholar any meetings with other Department officials. We are also ready to arrange meetings the scholar may desire with officials from other Departments.

In addition to the time spent with the host officer, the Department also arranges briefings for all the participants on more general topics. These briefings will give the scholar a broad understanding of the Department's organization and its relationship to other agencies involved in the foreign policy process such as the Department of Defense and the NSC. Also, since officers in the Department are interested in learning about the scholar's work, special sessions may be arranged to give a scholar an opportunity to lead a discussion with interested Department officers.

We believe the Scholar-Diplomat Seminar Program to be beneficial to both the academic and government foreign affairs communities. Scholars get an open look at the practical aspects of the formulation and conduct of foreign policy which, many have said, helps them in their work. Government officers make or renew contacts with professionals who have different approaches, fresh insights, and new ideas. For both sides, the contacts made as a result of this yearlong program are usually fruitful and long-lasting.

The seminars are arranged by the Bureau of Public Affairs on a periodic basis with the major organizational units of the Department. These are geographic and functional in nature and include units covering the following areas: Africa; Latin America; Europe; Near East and South Asia; East Asia; Economic and Business Affairs; Politico-Military Affairs; Science, Technology and Environment in Foreign Affairs; and Population Matters. Seminars are usually held twice a year for the geographic areas. In addition, special seminars may be scheduled as public interest demands.

The host bureau in cooperation with the seminar officer determines the size, format, and substantive areas of focus of each seminar. Seminars vary in size from 10 to 20 participants.

Nominations: Nominations of persons for invitation to participate come from several sources:

- Recommendations by former participants in the program;
- Recommendations and endorsements by heads of faculties and departments;
- Recommendations of community, civic or world affairs organizations;
- Self-nominations.

We want candidates who feel they can not only gain from the seminars but who can contribute meaningfully to the weeklong program. Of particular interest are Ph. D.'s (professors, associate professors, assistant professors, and instructors) and, in some cases, graduate students, who have had little or no experience with government.

Finances: Colleges, universities, and other educational organizations should be prepared to cover the expenses of their nominees. (This is a nonfunded program.)

Selection: Nominations should be mailed to Scholar-Diplomat Seminars, PA/PP/C, Room 5831A, Department of State, Washington, D.C. 20520. After being analyzed for interest areas, nominations are submitted to potential host selections. A single nomination may be submitted to several potential hosts. Applicants will be reconsidered for future seminars if they so request because obviously all applicants cannot be assured a place in a seminar of their time and choice due to space limitations. Each application will be acknowledged. However, because the support staff for the Seminar Program is small, only those persons selected to participate will receive further correspondence.

STAY IN WASHINGTON

Because scholars are asked to be present in the State Department at 9 a.m. on the first morning for registration purposes, arrival in Washington on the Sunday preceding the seminar is urged. Unless an emergency arises, all participants are requested to stay for the entire week. The Assistant Secretary of the host bureau customarily conducts the final session. Scholars should not plan departure from Washington before 4 p.m. on Friday afternoon.

RETURN VISITS PROGRAM

A natural counterpart to the Scholar-Diplomat Seminars, we feel, is the Return Visits Program. In our endeavor to maintain a continuing relationship between the scholar and the diplomat, scholars are encouraged to invite State Department officers to visit their institutions. Invitations must be extended within 2 years following the scholar's participation in a seminar. Because the scholars work closely with host officers during their week in Washington, it is often the host officer who is approached. We expect each visit to be a minimum of 2 or 3 days' duration, up to a maximum of a full working week. The travel and subsistence expenses of the Department officer are paid by the Department of State.

REMINDERS

- All applicants must be U.S. citizens.
- All applicants will be considered on their own merits regardless of age.
- Graduate students will be considered on an exceptional basis.

- Nominations are more effective when most specific in indicating the subjects of current special interest and geographic area of study. This information is used to determine host bureau preferences and appropriate host officer assignments.
- The Scholar-Diplomat Seminar Program has no funds. Applicants must cover their own expenses from their institutions or other sources.
- The number of scholars who can be accommodated in the manner desired within a single office in the Department is limited. Demand for certain areas is greater than for others—Europe, Africa, and Latin America are good examples of high interest areas. Applicants not selected because of lack of space will receive priority consideration for future seminars.
- The Return Visits Program is funded. We will cover expenses incurred by State Department officers visiting host institutions.
